Eva Braun was a German woman who became the mistress and later wife of Adolf Hitler. She was born in Munich, Germany, on February 6, 1912. Braun was a photographer and worked as a model for a time. She met Hitler in 1929 when she was 17 years old. They began a secret relationship in 1932. Braun and Hitler were married in 1945, shortly before Hitler committed suicide.

Braun was a very private person and there is relatively little known about her life. However, some details of her relationship with Hitler have been revealed in recent years. Braun was a devoted companion to Hitler and she supported him throughout his career. She was also a keen photographer and took many pictures of Hitler and his entourage.

Braun's life with Hitler was not without its challenges. She was often isolated from the outside world and she had to deal with the constant threat of persecution. Braun also had to endure the constant rumors and speculation about her relationship with Hitler. Despite these challenges, Braun remained loyal to Hitler until the end.

Braun's death is still a mystery. She was found dead in Hitler's bunker on April 30, 1945. It is believed that she committed suicide by taking cyanide. Braun's death was a tragic end to a life that was both fascinating and tragic.

Eva Braun: Life with Hitler is a gripping and intimate account of the life of Hitler's mistress. It provides a unique perspective on the Fuhrer's personal life and the inner workings of the Nazi regime. This book is a must-read for anyone interested in the history of the Third Reich and World War II.
