The Seneca People: Builders of Lasting Monuments

The Seneca Nation, one of the Six Nations of the Iroquois Confederacy, played a pivotal role in the shaping of Upstate New York. Their legacy is evident in numerous earthworks, primarily in the form of hilltop forts and defensive structures.

One of the most impressive Seneca earthworks is Ganondagan State Historic Site, located near Victor. This sprawling complex features a reconstructed longhouse, farming fields, and a ceremonial circle, providing a glimpse into the daily life and cultural practices of the Seneca people.

Sacred Burial Grounds and Gathering Places

Beyond the earthworks, Native American pioneers left behind numerous burial grounds and sacred gathering places. These sites serve as tangible reminders of their spiritual beliefs and connection to the land.

The Mount Morris Dam Burial Site, located in Livingston County, is one such sacred ground. This ancient cemetery contains hundreds of Native American burials dating back thousands of years. Its discovery during the construction of the dam led to the creation of a memorial park, honoring the departed ancestors.

Preserving the Legacy: A Call to Action

The preservation and protection of Native American pioneer sites are crucial for safeguarding the rich cultural heritage of Upstate New York. These sites serve as educational resources, fostering an understanding of the indigenous history and culture of the region.

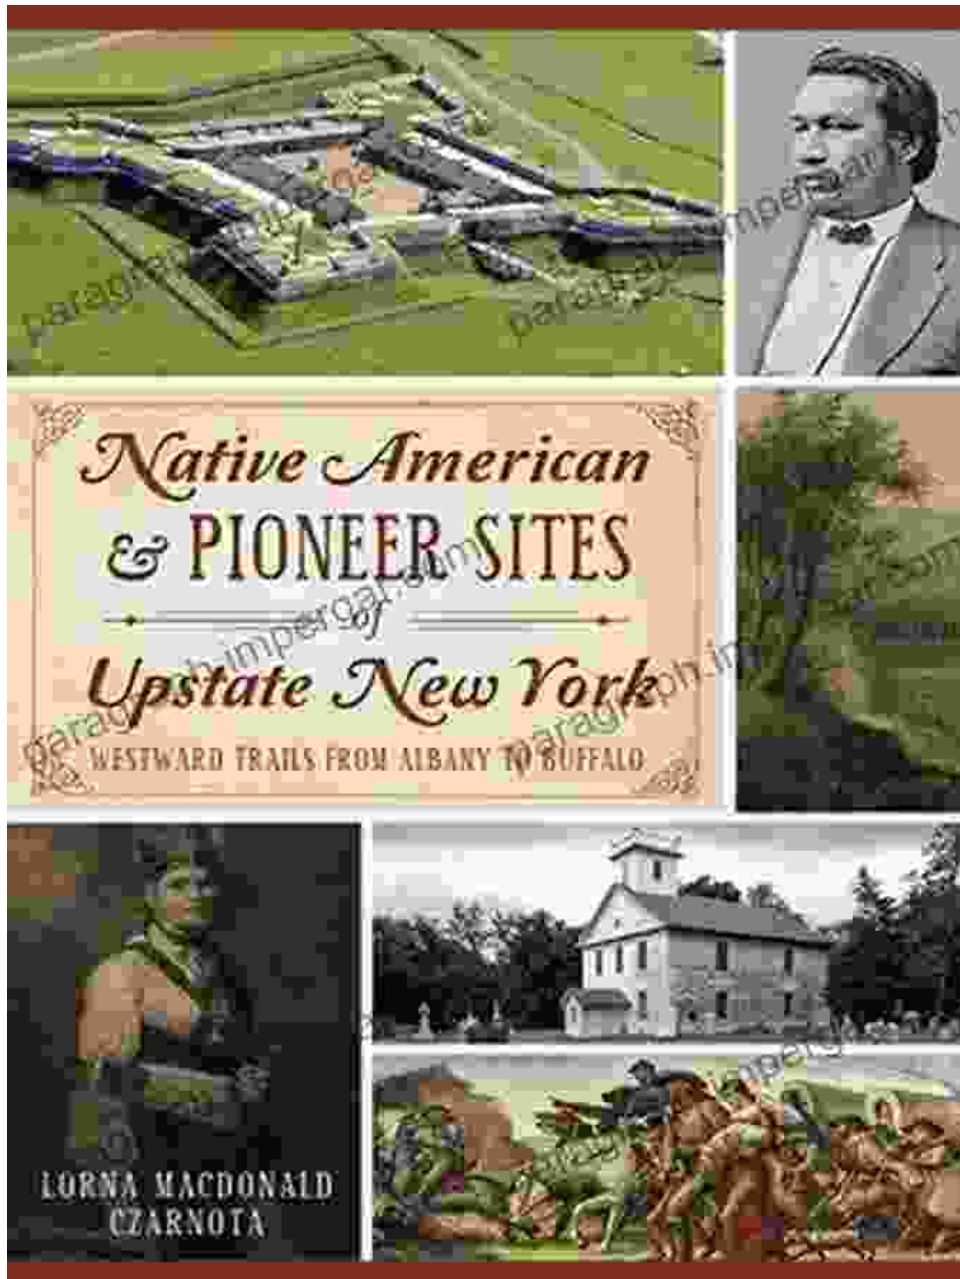

Organizations such as the Native American Heritage Center at Ganondagan are actively involved in preserving and promoting Native American cultural traditions. Through educational programs, museum exhibits, and community events, they strive to keep the legacy of the pioneers alive for future generations.

The Native American pioneer sites of Upstate New York are a testament to the enduring presence and profound impact of indigenous cultures on the region's history and landscape.
